

CRIME AND ELDER ABUSE

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Brian K. Payne received his Ph.D. in Criminology from Indiana University of Pennsylvania in 1993. He is professor and chair of the Department of Criminal Justice at Georgia State University. He has published over one hundred and thirty articles in scholarly journals on topics such as elder abuse, white-collar crime, and methods of social control. He is the author of four previous books including Drugs and Policing: A Scientific Perspective, Incarcerating White-Collar Offenders, Crime in the Home Health Care Field, and Family Violence and Criminal Justice: A Life Course Approach (coauthored with Randy R. Gainey).

Third Edition

CRIME AND ELDER ABUSE

An Integrated Perspective

By

BRIAN K. PAYNE, PH.D.

*Department of Criminal Justice
Georgia State University
Atlanta, Georgia*

CHARLES C THOMAS • PUBLISHER, LTD.
Springfield • Illinois • U.S.A.

Published and Distributed Throughout the World by

CHARLES C THOMAS • PUBLISHER, LTD.
2600 South First Street
Springfield, Illinois 62704

This book is protected by copyright. No part of it may be reproduced in any manner without written permission from the publisher.
All rights reserved.

©2000, 2005, 2011 by CHARLES C THOMAS • PUBLISHER, LTD.

ISBN 978-0-398-08639-8 (hard)
ISBN 978-0-398-08640-4 (paper)
ISBN 978-0-398-08641-1 (Ebook)

Library of Congress Catalog Card Number: 2010050540

First Edition, 2000
Second Edition, 2005
Third Edition, 2011

With THOMAS BOOKS careful attention is given to all details of manufacturing and design. It is the Publisher's desire to present books that are satisfactory as to their physical qualities and artistic possibilities and appropriate for their particular use. THOMAS BOOKS will be true to those laws of quality that assure a good name and good will.

*Printed in the United States of America
CR-R-3*

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Payne, Brian K.

Crime and elder abuse : an integrated perspective / by Brian K.

Payne. -- 3rd ed.

p. cm.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 978-0-398-08639-8 (hard) -- ISBN 978-0-398-08640-4 (pbk.) --

ISBN 978-0-398-08641-1 (ebook)

1. Older people--Abuse of. 2. Older people--Abuse of--Investigation.
3. Older people--Crimes against. I. Title.

HV6626.3.P39 2011

364.15'55--dc22

2010050540

*To Kathleen,
Chloe, Charles, and Claire*

PREFACE

About thirty-five years ago, the concept of granny battering appeared in British medical journals and was used to describe a host of abusive acts committed against elderly persons. Since then, a number of other concepts have been used to replace this politically incorrect concept. Perhaps the most popular concepts are elder abuse and elder mistreatment. Attention from social scientists from various disciplines has increased in the eighties and nineties. Noticeably rare, however, is criminological input into the study of elder abuse. This book offers a criminological foundation from which increased understanding about elder abuse will evolve.

It is my belief that the interdisciplinary nature of the elder abuse problem requires a cooperative effort among scholars researching the topic. Indeed, elder abuse is an issue that relates to several different disciplines including criminology, gerontology, social work, social welfare, sociology, psychology, victimology, medicine, and a host of other social sciences. Further, an integrated effort among practitioners responding to abuse is needed to effectively handle cases of elder abuse. Given the steady increase in the proportion of older persons in our society, it is expected that there will be more elderly victims in the future. Therefore, it is imperative that attention be given to the victimization experiences of elderly persons.

The reader will note that I refrain from using a specific age to describe when abusive actions become elder abuse as opposed to some other type of crime. I avoid setting an age restriction, such as sixty-five which is the age that the Social Security Administration uses to describe what is meant by "elderly," because I am more interested in the general ways in which older victims (as opposed to younger victims) are perceived, handled, studied, and treated. Also of interest is the way that consequences of victimization are experienced differently by elderly persons. It is my belief, however, that "classifying the elderly into a single group can do more disservice than good" (Doerner & Lab, 1998, p. 204).

The basis of Doerner and Lab's quote is that there is tremendous variation in the characteristics of persons over a certain age, such as sixty-five. Age is certainly a relative concept. As an example, one day I was talking to my neighbor, Alice, who was in her late seventies at the time, when another neighbor who was in his nineties drove by in his automobile. The neighbor I was talking to quickly said, "I hope I'm like him when I get old. I want to be able to get around the way he does." Neither of my neighbors defined themselves by their age; rather, they seemed to define themselves by what they were able to do.

So, when I refer to the phrases "crimes against elderly persons" and "elder abuse," I am talking about general trends and am not suggesting that all persons who are older are going to experience victimization in the same way. In general, though, older victims experience abuse in different ways than younger victims do.

This third edition of Crime and Elder Abuse: An Integrated Perspective builds on the earlier edition in five ways. First, new research has been added into each chapter, with more than one hundred new sources added. Second, the tables and figures have been updated, with applied critical thinking questions included in order to make the tables and figures more interactive with readers. Third, Chapters 2 through 8 now include updated box inserts titled "From the Field," which include brief overviews discussing some aspect of elder abuse. Fourth, Chapter 8 is new to this edition. The chapter provides insight into developing collaborative response systems. Finally, an Appendix including an exercise to understand how older individuals are often trapped in abusive relationships has been added.

B.K.P.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I am indebted to many persons whose input, insight, and assistance made this book possible. Randy Gainey (Old Dominion University), Garland White (Old Dominion University), Ed Stevens (Troy State University), and countless undergraduate and graduate students at Old Dominion University and Georgia State University read various parts of this book and challenged me to see and explain ideas from an integrated perspective. I am also indebted to my Georgia State University research assistants—Tatum Dorsey, Maria Gomez, Erin Marsh, and Elizabeth Yates—for completing the various last-minute assignments I threw their way.

Also, let me thank the many fine scholars whose works are cited throughout this book. May their efforts continue to expand our understanding of this devastating problem.

Finally, and most importantly, I would like to thank my family—Kathleen, Chloe, Charles, and Claire—for their love and support.

Consequences of Victimization ..... 120
    Deprivational Effects ..... 121
    Experiential Effects ..... 128
Fear of Crime and Elderly Crime Victims ..... 133
Intervention and Elder Abuse ..... 137
    Institutional Placement ..... 139
    Medical Services ..... 140
    Social Services ..... 141
    Therapeutic Services ..... 141
    Educational Services ..... 144
    Legal Interventions ..... 144
Positive Consequences of Crimes Against Elderly Victims ..... 145
    Protective Services Legislation ..... 148
    Restitution Laws ..... 149
    Legal Services Funding Legislation ..... 150
    Mandatory Reporting Laws ..... 150
Concluding Remarks ..... 152

CHAPTER FIVE: DETECTING, INVESTIGATING, AND
                                  RESPONDING TO CRIMES AGAINST ELDERLY
                                  PERSONS: A SYSTEMS APPROACH ..... 155
Introduction ..... 155
Adult Protective Services and Elder Abuse ..... 160
The Criminal and Civil Justice Systems and Elder Abuse ..... 164
The Police and Crimes Against Elderly Persons ..... 165
    Assessment ..... 167
    Enforcement ..... 168
    Support and Referral ..... 169
    Medicaid Fraud Control Units ..... 170
    Triads ..... 172
    Law Enforcement Gerontology ..... 173
    Local, Private, and Volunteer Efforts ..... 173
The Courts and Crimes Against Elderly Persons ..... 175
    The Role of the Criminal Prosecutor ..... 175
    Criminal Court Versus Civil Court ..... 177
    Volunteer Court Programs, Legal Aid Societies, and Crimes Against Elderly Persons ..... 181
    Improving the Court Response to Crimes Against Seniors ..... 182

Corrections and Crimes Against Elderly Persons .....	183
Criminal Sanctions .....	183
Civil Sanctions .....	186
A Note about the Justice System and Institutional Abuse .....	187
Concluding Remarks .....	189

CHAPTER SIX: UNDERSTANDING AND EXPLAINING CRIMES AGAINST SENIORS: ELDER ABUSE AND CRIMINOLOGICAL THEORIES .....

191	191
Introduction .....	191
The Role of Theory in Understanding Elder Abuse .....	192
Theories Explaining Crimes Against Elderly Persons .....	197
Elder Abuse Explanations .....	201
Intraindividual Explanations .....	202
Stress .....	206
Dependency .....	208
Transgenerational Violence .....	210
Symbolic Interactionism .....	211
Isolation .....	212
Rationalizations by Abusers .....	213
Patriarchal Theory .....	215
Explaining Abuse in Nursing Homes .....	216
Criminological Explanations .....	219
Deterrence Theory .....	219
Strain Theory .....	220
Differential Association .....	223
Control Theory .....	225
Routine Activities Theory .....	226
Social Disorganization Theory .....	230
Concluding Remarks .....	234

CHAPTER SEVEN: PREVENTING ELDER ABUSE: AN INTEGRATED APPROACH .....

236	236
Introduction .....	236
Individual Strategies to Prevent Elder Abuse and Fraud .....	238
Empowering Seniors to Prevent Victimization .....	238

Familial Caregivers and Elder Maltreatment Prevention . . . . .	239
Provider Strategies to Prevent Elder Mistreatment . . . . .	243
Awareness about the Possibility of Elder Mistreatment . . . . .	243
Watching for Signs of Mistreatment . . . . .	243
Effectively Documenting Suspected Mistreatment . . . . .	245
Institutional Strategies to Prevent Abuse . . . . .	246
Criminal Justice/Social Services Strategies . . . . .	249
Education as a Criminal Justice/Social Service Strategy . . . . .	249
Community Service Strategies to Prevent Elder Abuse . . . . .	249
Investigation/Enforcement as a Crime Prevention Strategy . . . . .	250
Empowerment as a Crime Prevention Strategy . . . . .	250
Legislative Strategies . . . . .	251
Mandatory Reporting Laws . . . . .	251
Penalty Enhancement Statutes . . . . .	254
Criminal Background Checks . . . . .	254
The Elder Justice Act . . . . .	257
Concluding Remarks . . . . .	258

CHAPTER EIGHT: STOPPING ELDER ABUSE USING COLLABORATIVE RESPONSE: TIPS AND SUGGESTIONS . . . . .	259
Introduction . . . . .	259
Shallow Definitions Must Be Avoided . . . . .	260
Theory Must Be Applied to be Useful . . . . .	260
Options Must Be Responsive and Collaborative . . . . .	261
Principles of Collaboration Should Be Followed . . . . .	262
Educators Must Be Involved in the Collaborative Effort . . . . .	266
Leadership Is Needed . . . . .	267
Differentiate Among Elder Abuse . . . . .	268
Empowerment Should be an Ideal . . . . .	268
Research Should Guide Elder Abuse Prevention/Intervention . . . . .	269
Advocate for Prevention . . . . .	269
Barriers to Collaboration Must Be Recognized . . . . .	270
Anomie as Goal Confusion . . . . .	271
Anomie as Role Confusion . . . . .	271
Anomie as Lack of Agreement about Definitions of Elder Abuse . . .	272

Anomie as Lack of Focus on Victim .....	273
Anomie as Aggressive Responses .....	273
Anomie as Strain on Workers .....	274
Anomie as Strain on Victims .....	274
Anomie as Lack of Training .....	275
Anomie as Ageism .....	275
Anomie as Unclear Laws .....	275
Understanding and Training Go Hand in Hand .....	276
Start Collaborating .....	276
Experiment with New Strategies .....	277
 CHAPTER NINE: RECOMMENDATIONS FOR FUTURE
POLICY AND RESEARCH .....
Introduction .....	280
Concluding Remarks .....	295
Appendix .....	297
References .....	309
Index .....	341

CRIME AND ELDER ABUSE

Chapter 1

THE YOUNG GET OLDER AND THE OLDER GET VICTIMIZED

1. Why is it important to study crime against older adults?
2. How does the demographic makeup of society influence crime?
3. What does the author mean by gero-criminology?
4. What are mandatory reporting laws? How effective do you think they are?
5. How does victimization among older adults compare to the victimization of other groups?
6. Is it ageist to separate out crimes against older adults? Why or why not?
7. Why would people who work in criminal justice be concerned about older victims of crime?

INTRODUCTION

I was working on this edition of Crime and Elder Abuse in my office one day when I received a call from a woman wanting to talk about elder abuse. While it is not entirely uncommon that I receive these calls, this particular telephone call was disconcerting. The woman shared that her 92-year-old aunt was assaulted by her daughter-in-law. The assault stopped when the older woman's son walked in the room and saw his wife holding a pillow over his mother's face. He quickly stopped his wife from smothering his mother. The woman calling me told me that the case was in jeopardy of being dropped from the criminal justice system because (1) the husband did not want to participate as a witness, (2) the older woman was in denial about the victimization, and (3) the authorities did not believe the case actually rose to the legal standards for assault. Understandably, the caller wanted to make sure her aunt was safe. I asked her if the authorities had contacted adult protective services. She indicated that they had not, and that she was not aware that such workers were available, nor did she think the police were aware of their existence. Upon hanging up, she promised to call protective services and I asked her to let me know how things turned out for her.

While it is unfortunate that this woman had to turn to a middle-aged, untalented academic for recourse, I understood that all of us are part of the integrated response to elder abuse. Still, it is problematic that no one else had told her about the availability of services provided by adult protective services workers. Also problematic is the fact that hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of older persons find themselves in similar situations each year.

Consider the case of Mary Ann, a seventy-seven-year-old, retired real estate professional, the widow of a judge, and the parent of a prosecutor. She and her husband had built up a respectable amount of savings that should have ensured that Mary Ann would live comfortably for the rest of her life. Con artists who swindled Mary Ann out of $74,000 with bogus investments and promises of phony prizes nearly shattered that comfort. Not long thereafter, she moved to North Carolina and got an unlisted phone number. One day a man identifying himself as Virgil Hastings called Mary Ann to say that he was a lawyer who was in charge of her case and that he had recovered her lost money, and that he would be able to send her the money if she sent Hastings $1,950 to cover legal fees. She sent the money and, as you may have guessed, never heard back from Hastings. This scam is referred to as a “recovery room scam” in that persons who are known to have already been scammed are targeted, contacted, and promised reimbursement in exchange for legal fees (Church, 1997).

Mary Ann is not alone. A 2009 Department of Justice study estimated that one in nine older persons are abused at some point during their latter stages of the life course. Consider also that elderly persons make up only 12 percent of the population but 30 percent of fraud victims (Wangrin, 1994). Fraud, however, is not the only type of crime committed against older adults. Indeed, there is great variation in the kinds of offenses that threaten the financial, physical, and emotional lives of older adults. Consider the following examples:

1. A woman paid roofers $4,000 for getting a layer of tar in one spot on her roof. The tar left the roof in worse condition than before (Calvan, 1998).
2. A nursing home worker was convicted for abusing four different residents—pushing, slapping, and throwing food at them (Griffiths, 2010).
3. “A Port Carbon woman admitted that she took almost $200,000 from an elderly nursing home resident” (Bortner, 2009).
4. The 37-year-old woman “befriended the elderly man in the early stages of dementia” and stole thousands (Marrero, 2010).
5. A home care provider pleaded guilty to stealing a woman’s credit card and running up a $1,500 bill. The same caregiver had previously been charged with stealing rings from nursing home patients (St. Petersburg Times, 2003: 3).

6. "A clerk stole more than $200,000 from the safe of an elderly couple and spent half of the money on lottery tickets" (Thrash, 2010).
7. "Two brothers have been arrested for allegedly beating their elderly mother into unconsciousness and stealing her credit cards" (Yarbrough, 2009).
8. A man "allowed a woman to remain in her own waste to the point that she developed skin conditions that required hospitalization" (St. Petersburg Times, 2010).
9. "Three women have been jailed for allegations they were involved in a scam that bilked an elderly man out of more than 150,000 dollars (Daily, 2009).
10. A man was arrested and convicted after his brother turned him in for selling their mother's farm with her permission (Levy, 2010).
11. Jennifer Nesta Hodges, the live-in caretaker of an elderly woman, was arrested for "leaving the victim laying on the floor in her own feces for more than an hour" (Daily News Staff, 2009).

The list could go on and on; the point is that older adults are victimized in a variety of ways. While official statistics show older adults are less likely to be victimized than younger individuals, the very nature of aging in the United States creates certain situations where older adults are more likely to be targeted for certain crimes than younger people. For example, children and younger adults would rarely, if ever, be victims of patient abuse in nursing homes. Likewise, younger adults are less likely to need health care; therefore, they are less likely to be victims of medical crimes (see Jesilow, Pontell, & Geis, 1985; Geis, Jesilow, Pontell, & O'Brien, 1985; Rosoff, Pontell, & Tillman, 2003). Further, fraudulent telemarketers, repair technicians, and investors are more likely to target older adults who have more money saved for their future (Church, 1997). These offenses (telemarketing fraud, occupational fraud, patient abuse, and medical crimes) are typically not included in official crime statistics. Conversely, older adults are not as apt to join gangs, do drugs, and engage in other risk-taking activities that ultimately lead to much of the crime and the subsequent victimization that official statistics measure. Thus, assumptions about the victimization of older adults should not be made from official statistics.

Rather, what is needed are focused examinations that isolate and specifically consider the social and political ramifications of crimes against older adults. This book represents one of the first discourses that integrates elder abuse issues within the framework of a criminological paradigm. To adequately integrate these issues, the way that the victimization experiences of elderly persons can be conceptualized as involving various types of abuse warrants consideration. This will be followed by a discussion of various